

Challenges:

TCi are working hard to demonstrate the long-term benefits of sustainability to people throughout the industry. A challenge is that there are so many aspects to sustainability, they need to prioritise what to do first to ensure it can be done well.

Reducing carbon impacts is a key priority, and the business is beginning to track their carbon emissions. They have got the data together, but it is sometimes a challenge to measure across their large range of sites.

Impact:

Since becoming members of the Supply Chain Sustainability School in 2017, TCI have committed to gaining a deeper understanding of sustainability and incorporate it into all aspects of their business.

- Gap analysis: The School's assessment helped TCI identify gaps in knowledge within the company and has encouraged them to look into new areas such as BIM, which had previously not been considered.
- Knowledge development: TCI assign the relevant resources generated through their bespoke action plan to the appropriate employees. The School's video content, which is easy to fit around a busy schedule, and digestible for people who are starting their learning journey, has been rolled out to colleagues to ensure the knowledge is embedded throughout TCI.
- Sustainable innovation: With the support of the School's resources TCI have looked at how they can innovate their products to create sustainable solutions. They have launched ECOdesk360 - a 100% sustainable workstation solution, made from 100% recyclable cardboard.

Value gained:

TCi have gained value from being a School member:

- Enhanced reputation: Many of their key clients actively promote the School so being an engaged member has improved their reputation and helped them continue to win business.

Future proofing:

Looking forward TCI hope to continue and increase their engagement with the new web platform and attend virtual events, which are now more accessible due to their location! They would like continued clarification on how to keep engaged in the process and show their leadership through being Gold members of the School.
